LABOR LEADER RUNNING FOR MAYOR OF SEATTLE

(By Associated Press)

SEATTLE, March 2.—Seattle voters today are voting to elect as mayor either Hugh M. Caldwell, attorney and former army major, or James Duncan, secretary of the central labor council and one of the leaders of the general strike here last year.

Duncan and Caldwell were nominated at a primary election February 17 at which Mayor C. B. Fitzgerald, candidate for reelection, was eliminated. Fitzgerald was Ole Hanson's choice for mayor when he resigned last September as chief executive of the city.

Campaign speakers have thrown charges of radicalism at Duncan, pointing out that he has the endorsement of the triple alliance, alleged radical political organization.

Caldwell was corporation counsel here until he resigned, during the war, to enter the army, the service in the intelligence department at Washington. Caldwell, in his first fight, received the support of Mayor Fitzgerald.

Promises to investigate a deal in which the city of Seattle paid $100,000 for a street car system, are among Caldwell's election pledges. He has charged that the city did not get full value. The sale was made while Hanson was mayor.

Displaying the Flag

There is no federal law now in force pertaining to the manner of displaying, hanging or saluting the United States flag or prescribing any ceremonies that should be observed in connection therewith. In fact there are but two federal laws on the statute books that have any bearing upon this subject—one the act of congress, approved February 20, 1905 (33 Stat. L. p. 725) providing that a trademark cannot be registered which consists of or comprises inter alia, "The Flag, Coat of Arms or other insignia of the United States or any simulation thereof;" and the other the act of congress, approved February 8, 1917, (Public No. 395, 64th Cong.), providing certain penalties for the desecration, mutilation or improper use of the flag within the District of Columbia.

Nevada forbids the use of the flag for advertising purposes and punishes public mutilation, trampling or casting contempt upon the flag as a misdemeanor.

It is the practice in the army, each day in the year, to hoist the flag briskly at sunrise, irrespective of the condition of the weather, and to lower it slowly and ceremoniously at sunset, indicating the commencement and cessation of the activities of the day, and to display it at half-staff on Memorial Day (May 30) from sunrise until noon, and at full staff from noon until sunset, and also on other days specially designated for that purpose by the proper authority, the flag always being first hoisted to the top of the staff before being lowered to the half-staff position.

Considerable discussion has arisen throughout the country concerning the proper manner of hanging and displaying the flag for decorative purposes. As already stated, there is no federal law governing the proper manner of hanging and displaying the flag for decorative purposes. As already stated there is no federal law prescribing the objects, and individual opinion differs as to the procedure that should or should not be followed. Custom, however, has made the following rules:

It should always be put on a staff of pole, if possible.

If on a rope, from house to house, or from tree to tree, it should be hoisted always by the top of the pole, and lowered by the bottom.

On the streets running north and south, on the east side of such street the flag should be hoisted to the north and lowered to the south; on the west side of such street the flag should be hoisted to the west and lowered to the east.

On streets running east and west the flag should be hoisted to the east and lowered to the west; on the north side of such street the flag should be hoisted to the north and lowered to the south; on the south side of such street the flag should be hoisted to the south and lowered to the north.

The only reason that can be found for the adoption of this custom of the flag being placed toward the north or east is that in all countries these directions are regarded as "positive." For instance, in map-making, the north and east portions of a city are always outlined in heavier markings.

Under no circumstances should the flag be draped over chairs or benches, to be used for seating purposes, and no object of emblem of any kind should be placed above or upon it.

Existing regulations governing the army provide that when officers and enlisted men pass the national flag, not enclosed, they will render honors as follows:

If in uniform they will salute.

If in civilian dress and covered, they will uncover, holding the head dress opposite the left shoulder with the right hand, if uncovered they will salute with the right-hand salute.

Old or worn-out flags should not be used, unless for banners or for secondary purposes. When a flag is in such a condition that it is no longer a fitting emblem for display it should not be cast aside nor used in any way that might be viewed as disrespectful to the national colors, but should be destroyed as a whole privately, preferably by burning or by some other method lacking in any suggestion of irreverence or disrespect to the emblem representing our country.
